I'll have to build one in one day... with a few additions. I love this clock. Simple and elegant. I've been looking to get a couple of clocks to upgrade my desktop, but there is always something about the build quality that puts it off a bit. This one feels like it would work great. Maybe I should thank you for putting all those great looking clocks on the Frustrated Clocks site. I have ordered a few from there and will never look at another clock website. Hi everyone, I've heard great things about the clock and seen it reviewed on several sites including some Linux ones. I've only had it a couple of days and have so far been very impressed with the ease of use of this clock. The clock is easy to set time, date, alarm and many other things, just got a little confused with the full screen window stuff at first, but that was easy to resolve. The clock looks great on my monitor, it matches the look of my desk perfectly and fits in with the rest of the desktop. I found the only thing I really miss is the nixie tubes, but I understand these are no longer made. If anyone has any experience of the clock, please let me know, I am very new to these kind of things. Best wishes Ian Nice, I love those clock displays, but the ones that are digital do not look right on my desktop, even when in

Scarcity chain of products (one that doesn't last) - daenz So, the first time I saw a scarcity chain of products, I thought, "what a smart way to build a brand name," but, now I see it's just one big bunch of shit to be the only product of its kind. But, first, it's a chain of products, and, it's a chain of products, and it's a chain of products, and the cycle continues and so on and so on. Of course, I do see where all of this leads. The product has an MVP, it grows and then it dies. But, the bigger problem here is that, in the meantime, the particular product has been sidelined, replaced by a new product and it's no longer the only product of its kind. The larger problem is that, it's the same product, but just on a bigger scale. It's not that I am against better technology, or better software, it's just that I want a way to opt in to that, and, now it's monopolized by a company that has no way to cater to that. I want the option of getting the same product, just in a more genteel way. I mean, really, if you can't buy Apple products because they're too expensive, then how can you buy a product that's no more than the same product, just more expensive? ===== mtmail > I do see where all of this leads. The product has an MVP, it grows and then > it dies. That's one way to build a brand and improve the customer experience. Not everyone wants to buy a latte or stick with
